NEW DUTCH GOVT. WANTS SCHOOLS TO TEACH KIDS THE NATIONAL ANTHEM

The four parties currently negotiating forming a new Dutch government together want to obligate schools to teach their students the text, meaning and melody of the Wilhelmus, the Dutch national anthem, AD reports based on a draft text of the government agreement the newspaper managed to get hold of.

The text written by the VVD, CDA, D66 and ChristenUnie also states that on their 18th birthday all Dutch must get a booklet about the history of the Netherlands which explains our "democratic constitutional state", according to the newspaper. With this booklet and teaching kids the anthem, the parties think that "coherent" attention will be paid to "elements that are important for the national identity". They also want to make locations with a "historical meaning" accessible and indicate these locations clearly.

These two measures seem to be a nod to the CDA's campaign promises to restore the "norms and values" of the Netherlands. Though CDA leader Sybrand Buma's plan to have kids stand and sing the Wilhelmus in schools apparently did not make it in, AD reports.
